

Biodiversity refers to the variety of life on Earth, from the tiniest microorganisms to the largest mammals. As human activities modify habitats, pollution increases, and climate change intensifies, numerous species face the threat of extinction. Conservation efforts worldwide aim to protect this diversity and ensure a balanced ecosystem.